The Which and The Wardrobe

The husband-wife design duo nailed it again with yet another impressive collection for Spring 2013. After being given a Zero Vitamin Water (mine was XOXOX and delicious) and seated early (third row) the buzzing crowd was seated in front of a large grass arch catwalk entrance to a nature backdrop.

Shawn Hewson and Ruth Promislow (both previous Bay Street lawyers) wowed the audience with menswear that was donned in floral prints and wide brimmed hats. Knits with zippers, large shades and linen pants looked effortlessly chic, and half-zippers complimented boat shoes to a tee.

Calm python print in muted shades against colour-blocked pieces was avant-garde without trying too hard. The pea coat with slim linen pants is a cool way to keep warm on breezy days, and clean lines balance prints like stripes and metallics.

Women's wear was limited to one outfit and was very men's inspired. Vintage cameras were a popular accessory with almost every look but complimented the single and double-breasted jackets.

The designers' ample years of experience as style experts are apparent in this cheeky and well-tailored performance.
